cutting, making and fitting a sample garment; and how annascholz customers' wishes and needs are considered through-out.

Ines put 100% effort into every task she has been given, managed her time effectively and has worked with dedication and accuracy. Her good English language and communication skills have helped her to engage with colleagues and customers. Ines works well as part of a team or independently. She is conscientious, organised and interested in learning new skills and processes. She has taken on responsibility for daily tasks in the studio and has been reliable and timely with her duties. In her final month, she taught a junior student new skills like garment cutting and pattern copying.

Part of the internship consisted of a student-led project, for which Ines chose to combine trend research, design and garment making. She started by analysing the current and emerging trends in London's streets and shops. Her trend inspiration was directed into the design of a raglan sleeve bomber jacket in an annascholz statement print fabric. Drafting a bodice block pattern in her size as a starting point, the pattern block was cut and sewn in non-stretch cotton and fitted before she amended it to her own figure. The personalised bodice block was used to create the raglan sleeve bomber jacket design pattern; fully lined, with pockets and zipped front closure. The jacket has been cut from fashion fabric, sewn, fitted, amended and finally trimmed with ribbing at hem, cuff and collar. Ines showed much enthusiasm, exceptional sewing skills and attention to detail and has worked dedicatedly with outstanding results.

Ines would be a great asset to any future employer, as she is highly motivated, committed and responsible. During her stay, she became a valued member of our team. It has been a pleasure working with her, and we wish her the best of luck for the future.
